The focus of this 9th Annual Conference of the DZNE Site Witten – in cooperation with the German Alzheimer Society – is a topic that has received increased attention since the new DNQP-Expert-Guideline has been published:

The building of relationships of and with people with dementia.

Relationships are one of the essential factors that determine and influence the quality of life of people with dementia. That building relationships is also essential in the care of people with dementia becomes apparent, amongst others, in Kitwood’s concept of person-centred care of PERSONS with dementia. Person-centred care means that the focus is on establishing personhood: for this, relationships with others are needed, as well as self-efficacy and the acknowledgement of personhood. Inherent in this process are acknowledgement, respect, and trust. This relatioanl understanding provides persons with dementia, who have experienced cognitive decline, that possibility to experience themselves as persons. Therefore, fostering and preserving this experience is at the heart of the Expert-Guideline „Building Relationships in the Care of Persons with dementia“.

Given the context of this topic, which we consider highly relevant in the care and the support of people with dementia in need of assistance, we would like to present and discuss with you the following relationship building aspects:

a) Even though we often talk about our aim to actively focus on the perspective of people with dementia, when do we really offer an opportunity for doing so?

b) In which context do we encounter opportunities that might have an impact on building relationships?

c) Which philosophical and ethical implications arise from a participatory perspective in care practice and research?
